"Language is the road map of a culture.

It tells you where its people come from and where they are going." - Rita Mae Brown.

Language indeed can tell a lot of things about a culture. It can show us where the people of the culture come from and where they're heading. ~~For example, there are lots of different dialects of the English language and each of them represents a group's mentality and history.~~ Also, some languages are ancient ~~and have a rich story,~~ while others are fairly new, ~~which can also tell a lot about the culture.~~

Americans have a distinctive American ^{accent} ~~language~~ and ~~they~~ are known for using a lot of simplifying while speaking. It shows us that people in America are not afraid of changes in the language, by which we can also understand that they're very liberal and love freedom. On the other hand, people from England have a very sophisticated and delicate British accent, which is very much different from the American one. They like to use long and beautiful-sounding words and to keep the language as it is, by which we can tell that Brits are very conservative. ~~They even keep the tradition of having a royal family.~~
